Aberrant carotid-innominate fistula is a well-known occurrence after repair of aortic coarctation. Most patients have multiple and complicated cardiac sequelae and/or neurologic sequelae. In addition, there are many patients who have no long-term complications. Although cardiogenic shock and neurologic sequelae are known complications of carotid-innominate fistulas, this occurrence has not previously been described as an early postoperative finding of aortic coarctation repair. The early complication presented in this case review highlights the need for careful attention to this complication when patients present for routine follow-up after coarctation repair. Acleris obtecta Acleris obtecta, the poorly-marked acleris, is a species of moth of the family Tortricidae.
