To evaluate a multiplex polymerase chain reaction (MPCR) for the detection of blood-borne viruses (BBV) in a blood bank and its implications in blood screening practice. In a prospective study, a total of 377 blood samples from donors were analyzed by MPCR for the detection of HIV-1/2, HTLV-I, HBV, HCV, and syphilis. Results were then compared to those obtained by the 4th-generation ELISA assays for hepatitis A, hepatitis B and hepatitis C. Among the 377 samples, 24 were found positive for one or more viruses. Twenty-three of them were confirmed as viral infection: one syphilis-positive donor had a non-specific MPCR amplification, 10 HTLV-I and 12 HIV-1/2 were confirmed positive, and 11 donors were found positive for 1, 3, 4 or 7 viruses. The MPCR assay showed 100% sensitivity and 95.3% specificity for the detection of HIV-1/2, 93.7% and 96.4% for the detection of HTLV-I, 97.7% and 89.6% for the detection of HCV, and 95.3% and 99.3% for the detection of syphilis. MPCR assays may be employed for the detection of different viruses in a blood bank with a high level of accuracy. This study suggests that MPCR assays should be used in the screening of blood donors to prevent transfusion-associated viral infections. Pablo Ferro (footballer, born 1985)
