Powered by the gameplay data, new motion-based animations create a more natural, fluid and reactive player animation. Details such as loose ankles, knees and legs, slides and falls, plant foot hitting the ground or even deflected passes occur naturally and will even influence player choices. New tasks such as side-to-side turns when dribbling or slides are already being tested in pre-alpha builds of the game. Why it matters “When we were looking at how to bring this brand of interaction and player emotion to FIFA, we thought about all the things that could be animated realistically,” said Alex Earl, Design Director at EA Sports. “We really wanted to give the players a sense that they were made of muscle and bone, not just a load of polygons hanging on a skeleton.” In addition to the new natural animations, new player abilities have been added, such as sprinting out of tackles, holding-up to release and dribbling against a defender, to add more fluidity and offensive strategies to the already acclaimed game play. Players will be able to set the exact acceleration, energy and timing of these new powers. This also allows for them to adjust the best power in different situations. The player moves quickly along the ground, but can hold-up and be released quickly to initiate a powerful counter attack, or slowly to win a game-changing dribble. Sprinting out of a tackle is now a power that can be used in various directions. You can now very effectively use this power to quickly transition into the attack, or you can drift across the pitch, use your powerful spin to regain possession of the ball, or use your powerful acceleration to run through a defender. Ahead of the official game reveal, EA SPORTS will also be running a first-person look at the game in our FIFA "Deep Dive" videos, coming this week. You can view the first one here: Gameplay of EA SPORTS FIFA: With EA SPORTS FIFA, the transition from controller to screen, or the throw, is back in an all-new way. On the pitch, with an upgraded controller, we’ve created an experience that lets you feel and think like a forward. Imagine running your teammates to the ball, or playing each match as a one-on-one matchup. The ball now floats in

Most of those are e-Sports titles from the PS3. My Xbox 360 library is going to be different. It's the intention to add between 5-10 FIFA titles to each collection to create a family of FIFA games without duplicates. I've had duplicates on my 360 library since the days of the original game all the way up to FIFA 20. This time I'd like to try to get it all done differently. I will be looking at the best games that are currently available, plus some older titles that haven't been available for a while. I have decided to extend my coverage to at least 2 video games a week. Usually I make it 4 videos per week. This might mean a larger collection of videos per month, or even per quarter. We'll have to see what happens. I've decided to cover non-Halo games, like Alan Wake, Saints Row, and many more. If
